

Federal Law Enforcement Officers, 2008

Brian A. Reaves, Ph.D., BJS Statistician

In September 2008, federal agencies employed approximately 120,000 full-time law enforcement officers who were authorized to make arrests and carry firearms in the United States. This was the equivalent of 40 officers per 100,000 residents. The number of federal officers in the United States increased by about 15,000, or 14%, between 2004 and 2008. Federal agencies also employed nearly 1,600 officers in the U.S. territories in 2008, primarily in Puerto Rico.

These findings come from the 2008 Census of Federal Law Enforcement Officers (FLEO), conducted by the Bureau of Justice Statistics (BJS). The 2008 FLEO census collected data from 73 agencies, including 33 offices of inspectors general.

The largest number of federal officers in the United States (about 45,000, or 37%) performed criminal investigation and enforcement duties (figure 1).

The next largest job function category was police response and patrol with about 28,000 officers (23%). Approximately 18,000 officers (15%) performed immigration or customs inspections, and about 17,000 (14%) performed corrections or detention-related duties. Other federal officers primarily performed duties related to security and protection (5%) or court operations (5%).

Excluding offices of inspectors general, 24 federal agencies employed 250 or more full-time personnel with arrest and firearm authority in the United States (table 1). These agencies employed 96% of all federal officers. The four largest agencies, two in the Department of Homeland Security (DHS) and two in the Department of Justice (DOJ), employed about two-thirds of all officers. Overall, DHS and DOJ agencies employed about 4 in 5 federal officers.

DHS agencies employed nearly half of all federal officers in 2008

In September 2008, DHS employed about 55,000 officers or 46% of all federal officers (figure 2). DHS agencies included the largest federal law enforcement agency, U.S. Customs and Border Protection (CBP). In September 2008, CBP employed 36,863 full-time personnel with arrest and firearm authority. The total included 18,665 officers stationed at official ports of entry (airports, seaports, and border crossings), 17,341 U.S. Border Patrol officers guarding the U.S.-Mexico and Canadian borders, and 857 Office of Air and Marine officers patrolling coastal waters.

From 2004 to 2008, the number of officers employed by CBP increased by more than 9,000 (or 33%), the largest increase at any federal agency. A majority of the CBP increase occurred in the Border Patrol, which added more than 6,400 officers during the 4-year period. The 59% increase in Border Patrol officers continued a growth pattern seen in prior FLEO censuses. From 1996 to 2008, the Border Patrol added about 12,000 officers, more than tripling the agency's size (figure 3). Throughout this period, about 9 in 10 Border Patrol officers were stationed in the U.S.-Mexico border states of California, Texas, Arizona, and New Mexico.

The second largest DHS law enforcement agency was U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE), which employed 12,446 officers in September 2008. This was about 2,000 (or 20%) more officers than it employed in 2004. The ICE total included 5,900 criminal investigators (special agents), 5,700 immigration enforcement agents, and about 900 Federal Protective Service (FPS) officers.

FPS officers protect federal buildings, property, and employees, as well as visitors to federal buildings. About 15,000 contract security guards supplemented the FPS force in 2008. Since these guards were not federal employees, they were excluded from the FLEO counts. New legislation, effective October 1, 2009, moved the FPS from ICE to the National Protection and Programs Directorate within DHS.

DHS also housed the U.S. Secret Service, which employed 5,213 full-time personnel authorized to make arrests and carry firearms in 2008. This was an increase of more than 400 (or 9%) from 2004. About two-thirds of Secret Service officers were special agents. Most of the others were in the Uniformed Division.

DOJ agencies employed about a third of federal officers in 2008

In 2008, DOJ agencies employed about 40,000 (or 33%) of all full-time federal officers with arrest and firearm authority in the United States. The Federal Bureau of Prisons (BOP) was the largest DOJ employer of federal officers and the second largest employer of federal officers overall. The BOP employed nearly 17,000 correctional officers and other staff who deal directly with inmates, such as correctional counselors and captains, to maintain the security of the federal prison system. This was about 1,600 (or 11%) more officers than in 2004. In September 2008, BOP facilities had about 165,000 inmates in custody, compared to about 153,000 inmates in 2004.

The second largest DOJ agency in 2008 was the FBI, which employed 12,760 full-time personnel with arrest and firearm authority. This was about 500 (or 4%) more officers than in 2004. Except for 230 FBI police officers, the FBI total consisted of special agents responsible for criminal investigation and enforcement.

In addition to the BOP and the FBI, three other major law enforcement agencies operated within DOJ during 2008: The Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA) (4,308 officers in 2008, down 2% from 2004), the U.S. Marshals Service (3,313 officers, up 2%), and the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives (ATF) (2,541 officers, up 7%).

More federal officers protected VA medical centers, the Pentagon, and nuclear shipments in 2008 than in 2004

Four executive branch agencies outside of DHS and DOJ reported large increases in the number of full-time personnel with arrest and firearm authority from 2004 to 2008. The Veterans Health Administration (VHA) in the Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) employed 3,128 officers in 2008 who provided law enforcement services for VA medical centers located nationwide. This was about 700, or 29%, more officers than in 2004.

The Bureau of Diplomatic Security (DS) employed 1,049 special agents in the United States in 2008, 27% more than in 2004. These DS agents protect the secretary of state and visiting foreign dignitaries, and investigate passport and visa fraud. DS also has the largest foreign presence of any U.S. law enforcement agency, although those officers are not included in the FLEO counts.

The Pentagon Force Protection Agency employed 725 officers in 2008 to protect the Pentagon and other assigned Defense Department facilities. This was 50% more than in 2004, the largest percentage increase of any agency with at least 250 full-time officers.

The National Nuclear Security Administration also reported a large increase in the number of full-time officers. It employed 363 nuclear materials couriers in its Office of Secure Transportation in 2008, 24% more than in 2004.

The four largest Interior Department agencies employed fewer officers in 2008 than 2004

The Department of the Interior's (DOI) largest employer of federal officers was the National Park Service (NPS). In 2008, the NPS Visitor and Resource Protection Division employed 1,404 park rangers who were commissioned as law enforcement officers—9% fewer than in 2004. Another NPS agency, the U.S. Park Police, employed 547 officers in 2008, which was 11% fewer than in 2004. Park Police officers work mostly in the Washington, D.C., area, but are authorized to provide police services for the entire National Park System.

The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service (FWS), another DOI agency, employed 16% fewer officers in 2008 (598) than in 2004 (708). In 2008, nearly 3 in 4 were refuge officers, with duties related to patrol and enforcement of federal wildlife conservation and environmental laws in the National Wildlife Refuge system. The others were special agents who investigated violations of federal wildlife protection laws and treaties.

Also within the DOI, the Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA) employed 277 full-time officers in Indian country in 2008, 13% fewer than in 2004. The BIA operates law enforcement agencies for some tribes, and also provides assistance and oversight to tribally operated agencies. In 2008, a total of 165 tribal law enforcement agencies employed about 3,000 full-time sworn personnel. (See Tribal Law Enforcement, 2008, BJS website, NCJ 234217, June 2011.)

From 2004 to 2008, the Postal Inspection Service reported the largest decrease in number of officers

Although the decrease in number of officers was significant at DOI agencies from 2004 to 2008, the largest decrease in the number of officers at any federal agency during this period occurred at the U.S. Postal Inspection Service. It employed 2,288 officers with arrest and firearm authority in 2008, which was nearly 700 (or 23%) fewer officers than in 2004. About two-thirds of the officers employed in 2008 were postal inspectors who were responsible for criminal investigations, and the other third were postal police officers.

The Internal Revenue Service (IRS) also reported a decline in the number of full-time officers from 2004 to 2008. The IRS, the Treasury Department's largest employer of personnel with arrest and firearm authority, employed 2,636 special agents within its Criminal Investigation Division in 2008. This was 5% fewer than in 2004.

The largest agencies in the judicial and legislative branches added officers from 2004 to 2008

The largest employer of federal officers outside of the executive branch was the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts (AOUSC). The AOUSC employed 4,696 probation officers with arrest and firearm authority in its Federal Corrections and Supervision Division in 2008. This was about 600 (or 14%) more officers than in 2004. Seven federal judicial districts did not authorize their probation officers to carry a firearm while on duty during 2008. Officers from these districts are not included in the FLEO officer counts.

The legislative branch's U.S. Capitol Police (USCP) was the largest federal law enforcement agency operating wholly within the nation's capital. The USCP employed 1,637 officers to provide police services for the U.S. Capitol grounds and buildings in 2008. This was 7% more officers than in 2004. The Capitol Police have full law enforcement authority in the area immediately surrounding the Capitol complex. The U.S. Capitol Police assumed the duties of the Library of Congress Police on October 1, 2009.

Excluding IG offices, 16 federal agencies employed fewer than 250 full-time personnel with arrest and firearm authority in the United States during 2008 (table 2). The largest of these employers included the Bureau of Engraving and Printing (207 full-time officers), the Environmental Protection Agency (202), the Food and Drug Administration (183), the National Marine Fisheries Service (149), the Tennessee Valley Authority (145), and the Federal Reserve Board (141).

Offices of inspectors general employed about 3,500 investigators with arrest and firearm authority

Thirty-three of the 69 statutory federal IG offices employed criminal investigators with arrest and firearm authority in 2008 (table 3). Overall, these offices employed 3,501 such personnel in the United States in 2008, 12% more than in 2004. IG offices investigate criminal violations. They also prevent and detect fraud, waste, and abuse related to federal programs, operations, and employees.

In September 2008, five IG offices employed more than 250 full-time criminal investigators with arrest and firearm authority. The largest, with 508 full-time investigators, was at the U.S. Postal Service. The next largest IG offices were at Health and Human Services (389 investigators), Defense (345), Treasury, Tax Administration (302), and the Social Security Administration (272).

Nearly a sixth of federal officers were women; about a third were racial or ethnic minorities

Women accounted for 15.5% of federal officers with arrest and firearm authority in 2008. This was a slightly lower percentage than in 2004 (16.1%), but higher than in 1996 (14.0%)

(figure 4). About a third (34.3%) of federal officers were members of a racial or ethnic minority in 2008. This was only a slight increase compared to 2004 (33.2%), but more substantial when compared to 1996 (28.0%). The increase in minority representation from 1996 to 2008 is primarily attributable to an increase in the percentage of Hispanic or Latino officers, from 13.1% to 19.8%. The percentage of African American or black officers in 2008 (10.4%) was lower than in 2004 (11.4%) or 1996 (11.5%).

Among agencies with 500 or more full-time officers, the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts (46.2%) and the IRS (31.5%) employed the largest percentages of women in 2008 (table 4). Other agencies where at least a sixth of the officers were women included the U.S. Postal Inspection Service (22.2%), the FBI (18.8%), the National Park Service Rangers (18.6%) and the U.S. Capitol Police (18.5%). Women comprised less than 10% of the officers at the VHA (7.8%), FWS (8.8%), and the DEA (9.6%).

More than half the officers employed by the Pentagon Force Protection Agency (51.2%) in 2008 were members of a racial or ethnic minority. The next highest minority percentage worked at CBP (45.3%). Other agencies where more than a third of the officers were minorities included the BOP (40.0%), VHA (37.2%), ICE (37.1%), the U.S. Capitol Police (37.1%), the U.S. Postal Inspection Service (36.5%) and AOUSC (33.8%). The lowest percentages of minority officers worked as NPS rangers (12.7%), and at FWS (15.8%), although both percentages were about 2% higher than in 2004.

CBP (38.0%) and ICE (24.3%) employed the highest percentages of Hispanic or Latino officers. In 2008, CBP employed about three-fifths of all Hispanic federal officers. The highest percentages of African American or black officers were at the Pentagon Force Protection Agency (43.0%), and the U.S. Capitol Police (29.7%). The U.S. Forest Service (4.8%) and FWS (3.6%) employed the highest percentages of American Indians. The IRS (5.7%) and Postal Inspection Service (5.1%) had the highest percentages of Asians and Pacific Islanders. (See appendix table 5 for the sex and race distributions of officers at smaller federal law enforcement agencies.)

In 2008, 25.0% of IG investigators were women, and 22.8% were members of a racial or ethnic minority (not shown in table). Both percentages were about the same as in 2004. African Americans or blacks (10.8%) comprised the largest minority percentage in 2008 followed by Hispanics or Latinos (8.3%), Asians or Pacific Islanders (2.8%), and American Indians (0.5%).

Among IG offices employing 50 or more investigators, Health and Human Services (31.6%), Agriculture (31.3%), and Transportation (28.7%) had the highest percentages of women (table 5). The lowest percentages were found at DHS (12.9%) and VA (16.7%). The largest overall percentages of minorities were found at Transportation (33.0%) and Housing and Urban Development (30.1%). The IG offices at NASA (13.5%) and VA (13.6%) employed the smallest percentages of minorities.

The Bureau of Indian Affairs had the highest rate of assaults against officers in 2008

The Uniform Crime Reporting Program of the FBI publishes data annually on law enforcement officers killed or assaulted in the United States and its territories. According to these data, two federal officers were feloniously killed during 2008. One FBI agent was killed with a firearm and one Customs and Border Protection (CBP) officer was intentionally struck and killed with a vehicle.

Participating agencies provided data on 1,347 assaults on federal officers that occurred during 2008. About 4 in 5 assaults (79%) on federal officers occurred during patrol or guard duty. Twelve percent of assaults occurred while making an arrest or serving a summons. A total of 188 (or 14%) assaults resulted in personal injury to the officer. Among assaults resulting in injury to an officer, 66% involved personal weapons (e.g., hands, fists, or feet), 10% a vehicle, 3% a blunt instrument, 1% a firearm, 1% a knife, and 18% other types of weapons.

Based on agencies providing 2008 data, the Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA) had the highest assault rate, 37.9 assaults per 100 officers (table 5). Although the Bureau of Prisons (BOP) is not included in the FBI's reporting program, a U.S. Government Accountability Office (GAO) analysis of BOP data found that there were 1,392 assaults on correctional officers during fiscal year 2008 (see GAO report 11-410, Bureau of Prisons: Evaluating the Impact of Protective Equipment Could Help Enhance Officer Safety). This equates to a rate of 8.2 assaults per 100 officers, second only to the BIA. The next highest rates were at the National Park Service (3.7), CBP (2.7), and the Bureau of Land Management (2.4). When only the assaults that resulted in death or injury are considered, the BIA had a rate of 28.2 per 100, far higher than the rate for any other agency.

Although not broken out in the FBI's data, an internal CBP analysis of assaults against officers during fiscal year 2008 found that 83% of suspects were against Border Patrol agents. (See the CBP Report BorderStat Violence: FY2008 Year in Review.) Applying this percentage to the number of assaults reported by the CBP to the FBI suggests an assault rate of 4.8 per 100 officers for Border Patrol officers. The study found that 70% of assaults against Border Patrol officers involved the use of large rocks as weapons, likely accounting for the high number of "other" weapons recorded in the FBI data.

All but 1% of the assaults against Border Patrol officers occurred on the U.S.-Mexico border. The report found a 46% increase in the number of assaults against Border Patrol officers in 2008 compared to 2006. Although smaller in number, assaults against CBP officers who work at ports of entry almost tripled during this period.

Methodology

The 2008 Census of Federal Law Enforcement Officers (FLEO) included agencies that employed full-time officers with federal arrest authority who were also authorized (but not necessarily required) to carry firearms while on duty. The FLEO counts of officers include both supervisory and non-supervisory personnel. The FLEO census does not collect data on federal officers stationed in foreign countries. It also excludes officers in the U.S. Armed Forces (Army, Navy, Air Force, Marines, and Coast Guard). Because of classified information restrictions, the Central Intelligence Agency and the Transportation Security Administration's Federal Air Marshals are also excluded.

BJS determined the eligibility of agencies for inclusion in the 2008 FLEO census using information from the 2004 FLEO census, agency contacts, a 2006 U.S. Government Accountability Office study of federal law enforcement agencies (study #07-121), and the Federal Law Enforcement Training Center (FLETC). A majority of federal officers receive some or all of their training through FLETC.

BJS contacted each of the 73 agencies determined to be eligible for the census via email, asking them to provide the number of full-time personnel with arrest and firearm authority employed on September 30, 2008, by job function category, sex, race, and primary state of employment.

Data on the total number of personnel with arrest and firearm authority were obtained for all agencies except the U.S. Supreme Court Police. The total number of officers employed in the Supreme Court Police is from the 2006 GAO study. Breakdowns by job function category, sex, and race for the Supreme Court Police were estimated using previous responses to the FLEO census.

The total number of personnel with arrest and firearm authority was obtained for the U.S. Secret Service, the U.S. Marshals Service, the Environmental Protection Agency (Criminal Investigation Division), and the Bureau of Industry and Security, but these agencies did not provide breakdowns by job function category, sex, race, or primary state of employment. Estimates for these values were derived using the 2008 total which was apportioned according to the percentages reported by each agency in the 2004 FLEO Census.

Definitions of job function categories

Police response/patrol: Includes duties primarily related to preventive patrol, responding to complaints and reports of illegal activities, arresting law violators, traffic control, crowd control, handling of emergencies, or other traditional law enforcement responsibilities.

Criminal investigation/enforcement: Includes duties primarily related to collection of evidence, interdiction and seizure of contraband, surveillance, execution of search warrants, analysis of information, arrest of suspects, development of cases for prosecutions, or any other investigation and enforcement duties pertaining to federal laws and regulations.

Inspections/noncriminal investigations: Includes duties that primarily involve employment and personnel security investigation, civil investigation, inspection, or any other type of noncriminal investigation or enforcement.

Security/protection: Includes duties primarily related to providing security for federal buildings, courts, records, assets, or other property, or to providing personal protection for federal government officials, judges, prosecutors, jurors, foreign dignitaries, or any other designated persons.

Court operations: Includes duties primarily related to the supervision of federal offenders on probation, parole, or supervised release. Also includes serving civil or criminal process, and providing witness protection, courtroom security, or other activities related to the federal court system.

Corrections/detention: Includes duties primarily related to the custody, control, supervision, or transportation of pretrial detainees, prison inmates, or detained illegal aliens.

Other functions: Includes duties primarily related to general support, administration, research and development, training, information systems, laboratory testing, domestic security intelligence, or any other function not included in the other job function categories.
