Machine-Readable Availability

This document, as with all other reports of this project, is available in machine-readable form. As an electronic record, it is accessible for free-text searching by users who wish to locate within it references to particular subjects. For example, a user who wishes to locate all references to some particular agency or concept may readily do so, either by obtaining an electronic copy of the entire document file or by requesting BSSR to perform a search of the document for particular words or strings of words. An electronic file record of the document is currently available in the Michigan Terminal System and, on request to BSSR, it will be permitted to any user who has access to that system.

For further information, contact Albert Biderman at BSSR.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This bibliography, in its automated and hard copy forms, was prepared with the support of members of the Crime Survey Research Consortium (CSRC). Many of the initial entries are from an unpublished bibliography prepared by Wesley Skogan of Northwestern University. Velma Handlin of the Survey Research Center, University of Michigan, contributed a list of approximately three hundred relevant works dealing mainly with telephone sampling and telephone interviewing. Her contribution makes up a substantial portion of the "SSA" and "SSM" classes.

Staff members at the Bureau of Social Science Research were instrumental in the creation of the bibliography. CSRC members there contributed numerous references. The classification scheme is based on an outline by Albert Biderman and the keywords were chosen with his expert guidance. Richard Roistacher chose and assisted in the implementation of the software used for the on-line bibliography. The tedious task of entering the documents was done by Prem Khurana. Throughout the development of the bibliography James Lynch provided invaluable input in shaping it to fit the interests of the Consortium.

INTRODUCTION

Scope: Entered in this bibliography are some one thousand works which bear on the work of the Crime Survey Research Consortium (CSRC). Although the range of its topics and document types is wide, the bibliography is not exhaustive. Retrospective and current citations will continue to be entered into the online bibliography from which this printed one was generated.

Organization: As presented here, the bibliography is divided into three major sections. The first is rather more comprehensive than the others. It lists materials referring explicitly to the National Crime Survey--its history, documentation, official reports, other uses of its data, and discussions of methodological issues. The second major section covers works about other surveys of crime victims and surveys of the general public on crime-related subjects; it includes reports of particular non-NCS surveys as well as general discussions of aims, methods and problems of crime and criminal justice surveys. Works related collaterally to this concept comprise the last section which draws from the literature of criminology, criminal justice, survey research and other fields a set of sources which have proven helpful in varied ways to the NCS redesign effort. Please refer to the "Outline of Classified Bibliography," pages ii to iii, for the subdivisions of these three sections, along with their identifying class codes.

Indexes: Appended to the classified document entries are indexes to subjects (much narrower than the concepts of the classification), authors and titles. Each subject index entry refers to the class code, first (or only) author and unique document number of a work cited in full in the classified list. "Keywords," controlled-vocabulary subject terms, appear after each document's full citation as well as in the subject index.

Indexing principles: Some explanation about the basis of the subject indexing is in order. The vocabulary chosen for keyword terms reflects only topics relevant to the NCS redesign project. It does not include certain other aspects of works which may have loomed larger in the minds of their authors; in some cases a document actually deals only by implication with a topic to which it is indexed. Partly because of the specialized nature of the subject terms, certain keyword entries are asterisked to indicate those topics which more closely characterize the overall theme of a document. The other keyword entries refer to a work's minor themes or subtopics. This weighting of subject terms reflects much more accurately the relative importance of topics within documents than between them. In the subject index, therefore, some of the works entered under a non-asterisked keyword deal with a subject in as much or more depth as do the works entered under the asterisked keyword. The difference is that the former discuss the topic as part of a broader subject, while the latter deal more exclusively with the keyword topic.

Subject keywords: To facilitate use of the subject index, a list of the keywords is inserted before it. This list gives scope notes for some of the less self-explanatory keywords and cross references among some related terms.
